

EXCLUSIVE FACEBOOK GROUP BRINGS DOWN BURMESE JUNTA

■ Radcliffe Square not location of upcoming BBC show

The Oxymoron can exclusively reveal that, in a shock move, filmmakers are not using the well-trodden background of Radcliffe Square for a new BBC series.

Rumours that a docudrama charting Captain Robert Scott's ill-fated Antarctic expedition and starring bad-tempered Antipodean Russell Crowe was to be filmed around the Old Bodleian and the Radcliffe Camera have thankfully been proven false. Director Trevor Rhys said: "Of course, Radcliffe Square was our preferred location, but for tax reasons we've had to relocate to the Australian Antarctic Territory."

Quote of the Week

“ This House Believes That Grammer Schools Work ”

- Union Advert, p2, Cherwell Week Four

THE BURMESE regime collapsed this morning when Oxford student Daniel Bread became the millionth member of a Facebook group called 'If this group gets a million members I'll bring down the Burmese government'.

The iron-fisted junta, which has ruled Burma for over thirty years, were powerless against the total legitimacy conferred by a Facebook group of such magnitude.

Trinity student Colin Ocean, who started the group, commented: "Great job everyone! We've done an amazing thing today."

"If you want to talk about it or anything, feel free to add me as I am always looking to make new friends."

■ In other news Burmese monks protest against closure of Greyfriars.

OXFORD FRESHER HAD BEEN 'TOP OF HIS SCHOOL'

AMONG the intake of some 4,000 Freshers this term, one student arrived at Oxford having stood head and shoulders above his classmates at his old school.

Ash Ever arrived at Hertford from Tanbury, a comprehensive in East

Sussex, with glowing credentials.

Ever's former classmate Jonathan Cole told us: "Ash got the best results in the year, captained the debating team, and was chosen as Deputy Head Boy".

Another, Rupinder

Amin, predicted great things for his friend.

He said: "Ashley was cleverer than most other kids here."

"He'll probably be Prime Minister one day."

We'll keep you updated on the progress of this exceptional student.

JAPANESE MAN VISITS OXFORD

THE CITY of Oxford was honoured this week with a visit from a traveller from as far afield as Japan.

Mr Wu was greeted by the conductor on the 'Oxford Tube' before embarking on a 30-minute journey from London, during which he was treated to WIFI internet connection.

He was then given a tour of the city and its colleges by a special guide from 'The Oxford Story'.

To mark his visit, Mr Wu was presented with a coupon for 10% off a Shaken Stephen's smoothie during a procession down Cornmarket Street.

CORPUS CRISP-Y

OXFORD'S homeless today announced their plans to found a college on Magdalen Bridge.

It is the first of its kind in Oxford, and is seen as an attempt to replicate the system used in Cambridge, in which at least 28 of the colleges are run and inhabited by vagrants.

A reweighting of the admissions system is among the dramatic changes expected.

Adam Smith, of the Flea Market Institute expressed concern that "the college will unfairly disadvantage those students unfortunate enough to have been brought up in a house".

E&M Society

www.eandmsoc.co.uk

...insisting we're a real subject since 1998